

Preserving the Past, Inspiring the Future

ELIZABETH JOYCE BRODERICK

MAIL MUSEUM

The Elizabeth Joyce Broderick Mailing Museum stands as a tribute to the remarkable history of communication—how people, families, and communities have stayed connected across time and distance. Named in honor of Elizabeth Joyce Broderick, whose dedication to the mailing industry and passion for preserving its legacy have inspired generations, the museum celebrates the art, craft, and human stories behind the mail.

Today, as handwritten letters become rarer, the museum’s mission has expanded beyond preservation. We are committed to nurturing the next generation of writers, communicators, and storytellers. When a young person takes the time to write a letter—truly write—it strengthens more than literacy. It strengthens empathy, creativity, and connection. A handwritten note to a parent, a grandparent, or a friend becomes a gift, a keepsake, and a bridge between generations.

This is why your support matters.

Donations to the Joyce Broderick Mailing Museum help us create hands-on learning programs for children, provide writing workshops for schools, supply materials for young writers, and inspire students to rediscover the joy of thoughtful communication. With your help, we can ensure that children grow up knowing the power of putting their thoughts on paper—and the joy that a simple letter can bring to someone who treasures it.

Joyce believed deeply in the importance of connection and community. By donating, you help carry that belief forward. You help us preserve the past while empowering young people with the skills they’ll need for the future.

A small gift today can make a lasting impact tomorrow—one letter, one child, one story at a time.
